S. S. DICKENSON, MANAGER OF LOCAL CABLE SERVICE

Mr. S. S. Dickenson, whose portrait is given on this page and who has had charge of selecting the landing station at Honolulu, started in the British Government telegraph system in England, being at the time one of the finest Morse operators in the service. He joined the Direct United States Cable Co. in 1874 and was an expert mirror reader. Afterwards he was promoted to Assistant Superintendent, which position he held until 1884, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Commercial Cable Company's station at Hazel Hill, Nova Scotia, one of the largest cable stations in the world. He still holds that position. Besides having the distinction of being one of the best all-round operators in his earlier connection with the cable system he is today one of the greatest experts in the electrical and other branches connected with a cable station.

FORMER EFFORTS TO GET A CABLE FOR THE ISLANDS

but not strong enough to secure favorable action itself.
An indication of the fertility of cable propositions in Congress at this stage is shown by the bare enumeration of the fact that between September 20, 1895, and December 14, 1896, twelve bills were introduced into the Senate and the House, all relating to the construction of a cable across the Pacific. Some bills were in favor of one promoting company and some in favor of another, and others still in favor of the construction of the cable by the Government.
Bills were reported and passed in one house repeatedly, only to fail in the other.
The project received the strongest support in the Senate, which successively passed bills, both to subsidize private companies and for the construction of the cable by the government, the main object being to secure action which would be ratified by the House; but when the Senate passed a bill favoring private construction, the House wanted government control; and when the Senate passed a bill for government construction, the House wanted a private company to build it.
This unfortunate and exasperating experience continued until the winter of 1901, and would probably be still going on if the proprietors of the Mackay company had not spiked the guns of the other companies by offering to build the cable at their own expense, without any subsidy.

And thus the old adage is again verified: "If you want a thing done, do it yourself; if not, get some one else to do it for you." And yet that other text: "The Lord helps him who helps himself."

A cough is not a disease, but a symptom. It indicates that the lungs and bronchial tubes are inflamed. This inflammation often leads to pneumonia. The surest way to ward off pneumonia is to use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy on the first appearance of the cough or cold. It always cures and cures quickly. Benson, Smith & Co., Ltd., wholesale agents, sell it.
